Trapped by Michael Northrop - Goodreads
TRAPPED is Michael Northrop's entry into the YA novel category, and it is a better-than-decent first book. I started out reading his book thinking I knew how it would all turn out - and in the overall scheme of the novel, I did.

Northrop (Gentlemen) offers a gripping disaster story that, for its reliance on luck and coincidences to set things up, is no less exciting. Although Tattawa High School in rural New England closes early for snow, basketball player Scotty and fellow sophomores Jason and Pete stay late to work on Jason's go-kart.

Even though there were no pictures in the book Trapped, I was still able to visualize the events happening using the descriptive writing of Michael Northrop. An example that I found of clear imagery is the passage: "Within an hour it was snowing full force again, as if someone was up on the roof pushing it off by the shovelful. (nook p. 111/177)

Trapped by Michael Northrop by Mitchell Gardner on Prezi Next
Northrop's attention to the details which motivated his protagonist was spot on. Scotty Weem and 6 other high school students, a mixed bag of people and personalities, are trapped for 5 days at the school as a blizzard rages throughout the northeast. This was not just any blizzard, and not just any nor'easter.

As seven lingering students wait for a ride home from Tattawa High School ("in the boondocks, the sticks, the butt-end of nowhere"), readers of Michael Northrop's nail-biting Trapped learn on the first page that some of the kids "weren't going to get picked up, not on that day and maybe not ever."

Book Review - Trapped by Michael Northrop | BookPage
Dear Mr. Northrop, Our Wilson Reading class read your book, Trapped, and we liked the book a lot! We didn't want to stop reading it! We liked the part when they all worked together to get food and solve other problems. We were so impressed with your descriptive writing that sometimes we got disgusted.
